Voting when in self-isolation or not available on election day

A proxy vote is a ballot cast by one person on behalf of another. You can request a proxy vote if you are not able to vote on your scheduled election day, due to self-isolation in your unit or perhaps being away from the building on that day.

You will pick one specific person (must be another tenant who lives in your building) and transfer voting responsibility to them. If you are interested in proxy voting, contact your local engagement Community Services Coordinator.

Translation and interpretation

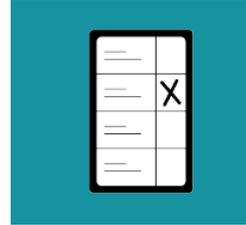

On request, TCHC will provide interpretation services, including American Sign Language, for any elections-related activities and will translate any written materials.

Requests must be made a minimum of 10 days before any event.

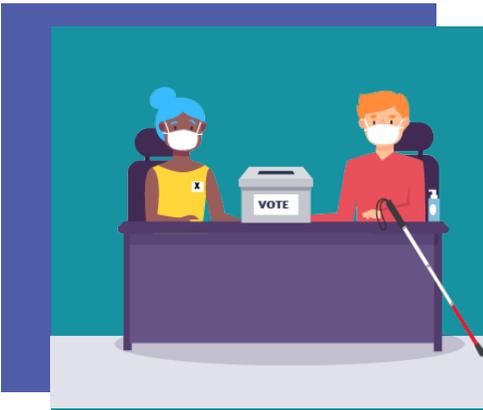

Visual impairment

Large-print ballots

Each polling station will only use ballots that are printed on larger paper with candidates' names in large print font.

Assisted voting

You can also ask for a polling station official to help you through the voting process (also known as assisted voting).

During this process, a polling station official will read the candidates' names to you and you will tell them which candidate you will vote for. The polling station official will mark the ballot with your choice and then fold the ballot and place it in the ballot box on your behalf.

This assisted voting process will be recorded for transparency and kept securely under the Toronto Community Housing Records Management policy. If you need the assisted voting process, you will be told about the recording before it happens.

Physical accessibility

All polling stations will be set up with physically accessible layouts in accessible venues. This includes ramps to raised common areas, clear entry and exit paths that are at least two metres (six feet) wide, and more.
